PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY

OF GREEK, LATIN, SCRIPTURAL, AND OTHER ANCIENT NAMES.

RULES AND DIRECTIONS FOR PRONUNCIATION.

The pronunciation indicated in the following list is that usually heard from educated speakers of English, who as a rule do not attempt to pronounce Greek or Latin or Scriptural names in the way in which they were pronounced by the ancients themselves—if that could be with certainty determined—but rather seek to assimilate the pronunciation to that of their own language There is therefore no great difficulty in the pronunciation of such words, and by attention to the following rules and directions any name in the list can be sounded correctly

Special knowledge required for the right pronunciation of these words is—

1 The seat of accent, and

2 The sound to be given to the letters as they stand in the word.

The syllable of the word which is to receive the accent is denoted by the usual mark, an acute accent, placed immediately after it, as the first syllable of the word Ca'to, the second of the word Cam by'ses, and the third of the word San cho-ni'a thon. The seat of the accent varies considerably in words of more than two syllables, though it is never on the last syllable, in dissyllables it is always on the first The pronunciation of the latter, therefore, as also of monosyllabic words, after the following remarks are studied, will present no difficulty, and consequently few of them are given in the list below The division into separate syllables is denoted by the mark - as well as by the accentuation mark. Two vowels coming together in a word, but having one or other of these marks between them, must therefore always be pronounced as belonging to different syllables

The sounds to be given to the several letters will be considered under two general heads, viz. 1 The vowel letters, and 2 The consonant letters It must always be borne in mind that silent letters, so common in English (e final for instance) are the exception in the words here treated of

I.—THE VOWEL LETTERS

The vowels heard in the words fate, me, pine, note and tube, are called long vowels, while those heard in the words fat, met, pin, not, and us, are called short vowels

1 When any of the vowel letters a, e, i, o, and u, constitute an accented syllable and also when they end one, they are pronounced as long vowels thus, in the first syllable of the words Ca'to, Pe'lops Di'do, So'lon, and Ju'ba, they are pronounced as in the respective key words fate, me, pine, note, and tube

2. When the vowel letters are followed by one or more consonants in a syllable, they are pronounced as short vowels, thus, in the first syllable of the words Cas'ca, Hec'u ba, Cin'na, Corin'thus, and Pub'li us, they are pronounced as in the respective key words fat, met pin, not, and us

3 When the letter a constitutes an unaccented syllable as in A by'dos, and when it ends one, as in Ju'ba, it is pronounced as a in fat or with a short sound somewhat similar

4 The so-called diphthongs æ œ, are always pronounced as the e of me, and are therefore simple vowel sounds, as in Cæ'sar, Præ'tum, Æ'o-lus Bœ-o'ti a.

5. The digraph ai in a syllable is pronounced like a in trait. It occurs only in Scriptural names The ai of Greek words was pronounced like the common English affirmative ay, or much the same as i in pine, but by the common spelling it is Latinized into æ An a and an i coming together but belonging to different syllables, ing together but belonging to different syllables, will of course have either the accent or the mark - between them

6. When r follows a in the same syllable, and is itself followed by a consonant, as in Ar'go, Car tha'go, the a is pronounced as in far In such a word as Ar'a-dus it is sounded as in fat

7 The digraph au, as in Clau'di us, Au fi'dius, is pronounced as a in fall An a and a u coming together, however, may belong to different syllables, as in Em ma'us

8 When e constitutes an unaccented syllable, as in the first of the word E-te'o-cles, and when it ends one, as in E vad'ne it is pronounced as e of me And when e is followed by s as the final letter of a word, as in Her'mes, Ar is-toph'anes, it is always pronounced as e of me.

9 When e is followed by r in the same syllable, as in Her'mes, Mer-cu'rius, the e is pronounced as e of her The letters i, u, and y, before r, have the same sound, as in Vir'gil Bur'sa, Cyr'nus When er is followed by a vowel, however, e is sounded as in met, thus Er'a to, Mer'o-e

10 The digraph ei, as in Plei'a-des, is pronounced as i of pine An e and i coming together, however, may belong to different syllables Compare Rules 5 and 7

11 The diphthong or digraph eu, as in Leu cip'pus E-leu'sis, Ti mo'theus, is pronounced as u of tube It occurs chiefly in Greek names In other cases the e and u belong to separate syllables Compare Rules 10 and 7

12 When i constitutes the first and last syllables of words, whether accented or not as in I be ri a, Fa'bi i, it is pronounced as i of pine And i as the terminal vowel of a syllable at the end of words is also so pronounced, as in Im'ri, A-ceph'a li

13 But i at the end of any other unaccented syllable than the last, as in In'di a, Fa'bi i, is pronounced as i of pin

14 In many cases i assumes the value of y consonant in English thus Aquilei'a is pronounced as if Aqui le'ya, Caius as if Ca'yus This is especially common in the terminations of words

15 O at the end of an unaccented syllable, as also when constituting an unaccented syllable by itself, is generally pronounced long or of medium length Followed by r in the same syllable, as in Gor'gus, it is not usually pronounced long, but as o of not The o in such a position is, however, by some speakers pronounced rather long than short, this being pretty much a matter of taste

16 At the end of an unaccented syllable or forming an unaccented syllable (as in Æ du i, A bi'hu), u is pronounced much the same as when accented, but shorter Following q it is pronounced as w

17 The letter y is pronounced as i would be in corresponding positions, thus the y in Ty'a na is as i of pine, and the y in Tyn da rus as i of pin

II.—THE CONSONANT LETTERS

The consonant letters, b d f, h, j, k l, m n p q, r, v y and z, have each but one sound and as that is the English sound, they present no difficulty The letters c g, s, t and x have each more than one sound and hence require rules to pronounce them aright

1 C and g are hard, or sounded as in call and gun respectively, when immediately followed by the vowel letters a o, and u, as in Cas'ca Cor ne'li a, Curti us, Hec'a-te Hec u ba, Gallus Gor'di us Au gus'tus, Meg'a ra. C and g are also hard immediately before other consonant letters, as in Clau di us, Ec bat'a na, Hec'tor, Glau cus

2. C and g are soft when immediately followed by the vowel letters e i, and y and the so-called diphthongs æ, œ, either in the same or in the following syllable, as in Cer'be-rus, Cin'na Cyre ne, Cic'e-ro, Gel'li us, Gis'co Gy'as, Ag-e la'us, Cæ sar, Cœ-cil'ius In words such as Dacia, Bicyon, Phocion, Accius, Glaucia, Cappadocia, the ci or cy having the accent immediately before it, is often pronounced as shi, some authorities, however, retain the s sound in such words

3 In Scriptural names, such as Megiddo, Gideon g is always hard, except in the single word Bethphage In consulting the list this will have to be kept in mind. The s following Scriptural names will serve as a guide

4 When c and g are initial letters of a syllable, and immediately followed by n or by t, they are usually left silent in pronunciation, thus, Cneus is pronounced Ne us Gnidus, Ni'dus, and Ctenos, Te nos Some persons however, pronounce the c and g in these combinations, and should the reader elect to do so, he must pronounce them hard

5 In Scripture names h often follows a vowel in the same syllable, as in Micah, Isaiah, Calneh, the vowel in these cases being pronounced with its short sound and the h being mute In Greek names rh is equivalent to simple r

6 The digraph ch is pronounced as k, thus, Achilles is pronounced A kil les, Chios, Ki os, Enoch, E'nok The Scripture name Rachel is the single exception to this rule, ch in it being sounded as in chain

7 S as an initial of words is pronounced as s of the word son, as in So'lon, Spar'ta Styx It is commonly so pronounced as an initial of other than the first syllable of words, as in Su sa, Si-sen'na but in some exceptional cases the s receives the sound of z, as in the word Cæsar, which is pronounced Ce'zar These exceptions will be denoted by the direction 's as z, inclosed within parentheses, thus, Cæ sar (s as z)' See also Rule 10

8 S final of words, when preceded by e, is pronounced as z; thus Aristides is pronounced Ar-is ti dēz. And the e so placed is that of the word me, as remarked already But when the final s is preceded by any other vowel, it is pronounced as s of son, as in Archytas, Amphipolis, Abydos, Adrastus.

9 S at the end of words when preceded by a liquid, l m, n, or r, is pronounced as z as in Mars, which is pronounced Marz Arnus, A'runz.

10 Si forming an unaccented syllable preceded by an accented syllable with a final consonant, and followed by a vowel, is commonly pronounced shi, as in Al'si um Hor ten si us When the si is preceded by a vowel it is very commonly pronounced as zi as in Mœ si a, He si-od A le si-a, Ce si us, and sometimes as the s of pleasure, as in As-pa'si-a, The-o-do'si us But the usage in these cases is not very well settled, and some persons carefully preserve the pure sound of the s even in such situations

11 When ti followed by a vowel occurs next after the accented syllable of a word it is pronounced as sh thus Statius is pronounced Sta shi us Helvetii, Hel ve'shi i, and similarly with Abantias, Actium Maxentius Laertius &c. The proper sound of the t is preserved, however, when ti is accented or when it follows s or another t as in Mil ti a-des, Sal lus'ti us Brut ti i, so also in the termination -tion, as in A-e ti-on In such words as Domitius the t itself may be said to receive the sh sound Do-mish i us.

12 The digraph th is pronounced as th of the word thin as in Tha li a.

13 X at the beginning of syllables is pronounced as z, thus Xenophon is Zen o-phon But at the end of syllables it retains its voiceless sound of ks thus Oxus is pronounced Oks'us If however, the x end a syllable which immediately precedes a vowel in the accented syllable, then the x may be pronounced with its voiced sound, that of hard g t llowed by s as in Aler arch a, whi h is fte pron u ced Al-erz-ar' h a.

14. Th t tter p when i it l a d f ll wed by t, is not usu lly tered, as a Ptolemæus, wh h is pronou ced T le-mæ-us

15 Ph represe ts th Greek ch racter φ and is pronounced as f thus, Philippi f i pron unced F bp pi. But when pA is followed by a con sonant in th same syll ble as in Phibi , it is us lly m tted in utterance th s word being p ou unced Thi a.

16. Ps presents th Greek ch racter ψ whi h as an in tial is pronounced as s th p being gener ally mitted n utterance as in P y le wri h is p ou unced Sy'kē. Ma y pers n s howe pro no ce th p as well as the s of ps.

1. SIGNS AND SYMBOLS USED IN WRITING AND PRINTING.

MATHEMATICAL

\+ Plus, the sign of addition or increase, as, $a+b+c$ (read a plus b plus c), also marks a positive as opposed to a negative quantity

− Minus, the sign of subtraction, diminution, or decrease, as, $a-b-c$; also marks a negative as opposed to a positive quantity

± ∓ Plus or minus, leaving it doubtful whether a quantity is to be added or subtracted, one or other as the case may be

× The sign of multiplication, multiplied by or into, as, $a \times b$, or 3×5

÷ The sign of division, divided by, as, $a \div b$, 24÷6 Division is also indicated by placing one quantity above another with a horizontal line between, as, $\frac{a}{b}$ $\frac{24}{6}$

~ The difference between two quantities, leaving it doubtful which is the greater; as, $a \sim b$

= The sign of equality, equals, is equal or equivalent to, as, $a=b$, 10+2=12.

> Is greater than, as, $a>b$, a is greater than b

< Is less than, as, $a<b$, a is less than b

∝ Varies as said of a quantity that increases or diminishes according as another quantity increases or diminishes, as, $a \propto b$

Is to, as, signs used to indicate ratio or proportion, thus, $a : b :: c : d$, that is, a is to b in the same ratio as c is to d, 3 : 5 :: 6 : 10

Because or since, } Therefore, } $a=b$ and $c=d$ $a+c=b+d$, that is, because a is equal to b, and c is equal to d therefore a plus c is equal to b plus d

∞ Indefinitely great, infinity

0 Indefinitely small, a quantity less than any assignable quantity, zero

$\sqrt{\ }$ $\sqrt{\ \ }$ The radical or root sign. When used alone it indicates the square root, as, $\sqrt{b}$, $\sqrt{16}$

Higher roots are indicated by small figures called indices, thus, $\sqrt[3]{a}$, $\sqrt[4]{a}$, $\sqrt[10]{a}$, $\sqrt[n]{a+b}$, that is, the cube root of a, the fourth root of a the tenth root of a, the nth root of $a+b$ The same roots might also be indicated by small fractions, as $a^{\frac{1}{3}}$ $a^{\frac{1}{4}}$, $a^{\frac{1}{10}}$, and so on

So also the powers to which quantities are raised are indicated by similar small figures or indices thus, a^2, a^4, a^n, a^{n-1}, &c

( ) [ ] { } Indicate that the quantities inclosed are to be treated together as forming a single term or expression, as, $2(a+\frac{b}{2}+4)$

⊥ The perpendicular, perpendicular to, as, AB ⊥ CD, AB is perpendicular to CD

∥ Parallel, parallel to, as, AB ∥ CD, AB is parallel to CD

△ Triangle, the triangle, as, △ ABC, the triangle ABC

□ Square, the square, as, □ ABCD, the square ABCD

▭ Rectangle, the rectangle, as, ▭ ABCD, the rectangle ABCD

○ Circle, the circle, circumference, 360°

~ The number 3·1415926 that is, the ratio of the circumference of a circle to its diameter, approximately equivalent to 3½ to 1, or 22 to 7

° Degree or degrees, whether of a circle or of temperature, as, 32° the freezing point of water (Fahr), 360° the whole circumference of a circle

′ Minutes in circular measurement, as, 6° 20′, six degrees twenty minutes

″ Seconds in circular measurement, as, 60″, sixty seconds.

′, ″, ‴ are used also to denote feet, inches, and lines.

It will be noticed that if any letter be followed by one of equal or less value the total value is equal to the sum of the two taken together; but if a letter be preceded by one of less value the difference of their separate values is to be understood.

CHEMICAL

By means of chemical symbols, or formulas, the composition of the most complicated substances can be very easily expressed and that too, in a very small compass An abbreviated expression of this kind often gives, in a single line more information as to details than could be given in many lines of letterpress.

Mercury (Hydrargyrum),	Hg

When any of the above symbols stands by itself it indicates one atom of the element it represents Thus H stands for one atom of hydrogen, O for one atom of oxygen, and Cl for one atom of chlorine

When a symbol has a small figure or number underwritten, and to the right of it, such figure or number indicates the number of atoms of the element Thus O_3 signifies two atoms of oxygen, S_5 five atoms of sulphur, and C_{10} ten atoms of carbon

When two or more elements are united to form a chemical compound, their symbols are written one after the other, to indicate the compound. Thus H_2O means water, a compound of two atoms of hydrogen and one of oxygen, $C_{12}H_{22}O_{11}$ indicates cane-sugar, a compound of twelve atoms of carbon, twenty-two of hydrogen, and eleven of oxygen

These two expressions as they stand denote respectively a molecule of the substance they represent, that is, the smallest possible quantity of it capable of existing in the free state To express several molecules a large figure is prefixed, thus, $2H_2O$ represents two molecules of water, $4(C_{12}H_{22}O_{11})$ four molecules of cane-sugar

When a compound is formed of two or more compounds the symbolical expressions for the compound are usually connected together by a comma thus the crystallized magnesic sulphate is $MgSO_4,7H_2O$ The symbols may also be used to express the changes which occur during chemical action and they are then written in the form of an equation, i which one side represents the substances as they exist before the change the other th result of th reaction. Thus, 2H +O =2H O expresses th fact that two molecules of hydr g n, each containing two atoms, and one of oxygen, also containing tw atoms, combine to give tw m lecules of w ter each of th m containing two atoms of hydrogen and one of oxygen.

I w nder if any man is as clever as he he imagines him self I know I have not the confidence in myself I had a month ago as an amateur cook. I think it was my friend Davidson who first put the idea in my head to try my hand at cook ng Th way he would describe the cook ng of steaks on his yacht would make any one's mouth water and it seemed to be always steaks they had. I asked him how he learned to cook, and he gave me the secret in one lesson He said, You just use plenty butter that's how women can t cook properly they gru ge butter It is five or six years since he first told me about his wonderful powers as a cook, and I have often longed f r an opportunity to emulate him in the art. D vidson always [illegible] enth usiast on this subject. He would say "Man, when it was My turn the fellow could hardly be kept on deck after the onions began to brown nd the m ll went up and the doctor used to stand with a big rolling pin to keep James and the rest of them back, and every minute they would be crying down that it would do fi e [I don t kn w anything about yachting and any time I have been over at h urs two en I had no taste for food. I always had more than I wanted. I remember going to Dublin, and at breakfast a tureen of ham and eggs was placed b fore me but by the time I had helped the company I had to g on deck and admire the prospect. An idea occurred to me, how r r to get some companions to join me on a holiday with a cata an "I would attend to the cooking. I said; but I never got any one to agree.

I believ now if I had promoted each one to office of cook I would have been successful for I think every man is sure he is a born cook.
